SALT LAKE

CITY AND NEIGHBORHOOD.

Senator Murdoch's child-saving bill was passed unanimously by the state senate Monday. It went through unchanged in any important particular from the form in which it was submitted by the Salvation Army and the Utah Home-Finding association. Senator Bamberger had a few lines stricken out which required "religious instruction and Sabbath observance" in children given homes under the provisions of the act, and Senator Barber had the measure amended to provide that only a sole surviving parent would have to be an habitual drunkard in order to have a child taken from his family.

The offices of Z. C. M. I. were moved Saturday evening into the new quarters at the rear of the second floor of the new building. The improvements in the central section of the main building include metallic ceilings.

A meeting of teachers was held in the high school assembly room Friday afternoon for the purpose of discussing Mr. Dore's bill creating a pension fund for aged teachers. It was decided to appoint a representative from each school and from the board of supervisors to draw up a charter for the organization provided for in the bill. The appointments will be announced some time before or not later than March 5, and the committee is to report not later than May 1.

The three new street cars received Thursday afternoon of last week from the east by the local company, have been taken to the barn, and by Monday will be ready for service. The other three, coming over the Union Pacific, are expected in any day. The numbers of the new cars are 69 to 74 inclusive. They are of the Laclede pattern, and are equipped with air brakes, trolley catchers, sandboxes, electric headlights and, of course, runner fender. The panel buttons to warn conductors to stop, placed at every seat, will not be used as it has been found that the public does not use this signal with discretion, while children are allowed to push the buttons in "for fun," and thus cause confusion.

The management of the Laclede House gave a dance Monday evening to the employees of the institution on the new floor of the building that is being fitted up as a cloak department. There were about seventy-five guests present and an enjoyable evening was spent. After the dancing refreshments were served.

Comfort can be enjoyed only by those whose money affairs cause no worry. To be "comfortably rich" is an ideal condition, enjoyed by few, and yet within the reach of all. A steady income from money invested in safe securities is a source of comfort and pleasure. When that income is sufficient to live on, the possessor is as rich as any one can possibly be. There is no need then to work or worry, and there is time for the higher aims and pleasures of life. Happily, too, such investments are in the long run more profitable than speculations. Our first mortgage securities, netting 6 per cent per annum, are the safest and best paying investments in the world. The investor holds the security and we do the work. Mackay's Generosity.

To illustrate the late John W. Mackay's charity, the following stories are told:

"Once I went to Mackay," said Sam Davis of Carson City, "and said: 'John, old lady Peters died last night, and his widow hasn't a d—d cent left.'"

"How much had he better do for her?" Mackay asked.

"I guess we can stand $500," I said.

"All right. How'll we divide it up?"

said Mackay, with a chuckle, "I'll pretend that old Crooks stole the money, and when blankety-blank old skint gets the letter of thanks, the woman'll write him, he'll drop dead with surprise."

"Crooks was one of Mackay's partners, and was even more noted for his stinginess than Mackay for his generosity."

"Anyway, I took Mackay's check and sent it to old lady Peters. And I told her that the money came from John Mackay. The next morning I was walking down the street in Carson City when I saw old John standing on the sidewalk in front of his office. He was holding a sheet of paper in his hand and tears were running down his cheeks."

"Here, Sam," he called to me, 'you blankety-blank old blabber, you went and blabbed to old lady Peters, you blabbing you. And she's written me a letter that makes me cry, you hang it, and I don't like to cry. Here, you—' stuffing the letter into my hand—'read this letter and cry yourself. I'm betting you'll read the letter and then I'll take my oath he never stole a cent. Ain't that kind of a man. But he is the most ornery, careless cuss I ever knew in my life. If there's $4.50 missing from my pocket, I'll bet that miserable, careless husband of yours has left the money sticking around in the pockets of some of his old clothes. Go upstairs and look in the pockets of all his old clothes. Of course she didn't find anything. Downstairs she came, where Mackay was still standing in the hall."

"No, Mr. Mackay," she said, 'I didn't find anything. Then she started to cry. "Mrs. Jenkins," said Mackay, "there is your husband's old overcoat hanging on the hatrack. Now, it would be just like him—he's so blamed careless and ornery—to leave that roll of bills in the pocket of that old coat. Suppose you go and look."

"The minute that woman got her fingers on the big bundle of money Mackay had stuffed into the overcoat pocket he took a shoot out of the front door."

"I went to Mackay to get a check for a poor widow. It was not long after his experience with old Mrs. Peters and her letter of thanks. "Sam," he said, "I'm going to fine you for blabbing on me to Mrs. Peters. I'll fine you $200, and a check for $200 is the best you can have for this other woman. And if you let her know where the money comes from don't you ever dare to ask me for another cent, for you don't get it."

"I agreed not to give him away, and accordingly I had his check cashed and took the roll of bills down and personally handed it to the widow. "Where did this money come from, Mr. Davis?" she asked.

"Oh," I answered carelessly, 'a bunch of your friends here in Carson made up a little purse for you.' "Well," she said, looking at me earnestly for a minute, you go back and tell Mr. Mackay that I shall thank him to my dying day."

"Once when the press in the Carson City Appeal had just started to run he came rushing in and called to me in an excited tone of voice: "Sam," he said, 'stop the press! Stop the press! "What's the matter, John?" I asked in alarm.

"Why, old man Crooks—I have explained that Crooks was one of his partners, famous for his stinginess—'old man Crooks' had a peck of apples to the orphan's home."

OBITUARY.

HARRY LESSARD.

Harry Lessard, a respected and well known member of the Cathedral parish, died last Friday after a several week's illness.

Mr. Lessard was born in France forty-three years ago. He came to America thirty-four years ago and settled in Detroit, Mich., where he studied pharmacy. He next came to Kansas City and six years ago came west to Carlin, Nev., where he met and married Mrs. Mary McLoughlin. Mr. Lessard came to Salt Lake three years ago, where he followed his profession.

The funeral took place from St. Mary's cathedral last Sunday afternoon. Rev. Father Curran, who had attended Mr. Lessard during his illness, officiated, and accompanied the remains to the cemetery.

The funeral was one of the most impressive ever held at St. Mary's. The eulogistic music was rendered by the choir of St. Mary's cathedral, Miss Little Owen impressively singing "Calvary." The floral offerings were very beautiful. The Macabees and the three degree team of the Woodmen of the World attended in a body. Rev. Father Curran spoke touchingly of the life of Mr. Lessard, alluding to his fine manly qualities and upright character.

Mr. Lessard held many positions of trust and responsibility in the west, for he was looked upon by all as a man of highest integrity and sterling honor.

All who knew him he was highly esteemed and the announcement of his death was received with deep regret.

The deceased leaves a wife and 3-year-old daughter. Mrs. Lessard is the sister of Henry McLoughlin, who has charge of the baggage department in the Union depot at Ogden. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Buller are Mrs. Lessard's cousins. The Intermountain

BOY DIVERS OF POLYNESIA.

Without the Use of Suits, These Divers Reach Enormous Depths. (Philadelphia Ledger.)

Away out in the South Pacific ocean, where white men rarely are seen, there lies a little coral atoll known as Hikueru Atoll. It is different from most coral atolls of which you read in your geography, for it is a solid ring of coral, and the lagoon inside of it can be entered only by dragging boats over the beach.

This lagoon is one of the valuable pearl shell lagoons, and is sought every year by the dwellers on Tahiti and other islands of the South seas to fish for pearls.

The French government, which owns the atoll, has forbidden the use of diving suits, because it is feared that this method would prove too destructive to the pearl shells, so the diving is done in the ancient South sea way, by men and boys and women, who go down with no artificial help.

When the time comes for the pearl fishing they get out from their islands, some of them 400 miles away from the atoll. Most of the natives bring their families and household effects with them. Many even bring their houses. This is not so difficult an undertaking as it may appear at first sight, for the houses are made from light coconut palms and pandanus leaves. They are built up in transports, so they are easy to take apart and transport.

Most of the diving is done in water from sixty to seventy feet deep. The sea is so clear in the atoll that the diver can study the bottom perfectly with a water glass and locate the best clumps of shell before he dives.

When he is ready to go down he slips into the water over the side of the boat, and, holding to the gunwale with one hand, he looks downward through the water glass. The moment he sights a good lot of shells he begins to breathe deeply, sucking the air in until his chest is inflated as far as it can be, and then exhaling slowly through the mouth, so that it makes a whistling sound. Having thus cleaned out his lungs, he takes a long breath, filling his chest with perfectly pure air, and then he lets go of the gunwale and instantly sinks below the surface, feet foremost.

After he has thus sunk about ten feet he turns quickly and swims toward the bottom, head first, cleaving the water as gracefully and swiftly as a fish would. On touching bottom he hauls himself along by seizing clumps of coral until he reaches the shells. Then he breaks them off the reef with his right hand, which is protected by white cotton cloth. Quickly he puts the shells into a little net of cocoanut fibre, which he carries over his shoulders. Then he stands erect, and immediately he shoots toward the surface as if he were pulled by a rope. So swiftly does he ascend that he frequently seems to leap out of the water when he reaches the surface.

Of course, the boys and girls of these South Sea islands can swim and dive almost as well as if they were water dwellers. One of them made an exhibition dive for the officers of the United States fish commission steamship Albatross last year. He remained under water two minutes and forty seconds, and reached bottom at a depth of 102 feet under the boat's keel. The water was so transparent that the beholders could see him clearly. They declare that after he had touched bottom at this enormous depth he calmly picked over the pieces of coral and shell at the bottom to select one to bring up, exactly as a man might cull Cathedral when he was at his case in a garden. This young diver was ready to go down again only a few minutes after he came up.

The Albatross men were told that one diver had made a record by reaching the bottom in a place where soundings showed the ocean to be 138 feet deep.

Last week I was (writes the London correspondent of the Eastham and Ship Canal) the spectator of the following amusing episode. The omnibus on which I was sitting had been held up by a policeman to allow the cross-traffic to proceed. The omnibus, who was evidently new to the job, and very pleased with his authority, kept us waiting some what longer than was necessary, so, although the signal was against him, our driver determined to proceed. "Didn't you see my hand up?" shouted the policeman, constable. "Well, I suddenly noticed that it got dark suddenly-like, but I didn't know it was 'and'. Yer see, I 'ad all my work cut out to keep the 'osses from shyn' at yer feet."

Though we know that time holds the mirror of the past ever before us, few have the courage to look on the scenes pictured therein.
